

Dismantling Racism in Philanthropy

How are foundations changing the way they give?

Tuesday February 23, 2021 | 12-1p.m

Join Community Foundations of Canada's Andrew Chunilall and panellists as they discuss the decolonization of the philanthropic sector and how to better serve communities that have been historically underinvested.

Andrew Chunilall joined Community Foundations Canada in 2013 and became CEO in 2017, following a six-year tenure as Vice-President of Finance for the London Community Foundation and his long-standing service as a finance and regulatory expert for Canada's philanthropic sector.

Now at the head of the community foundation movement, Andrew is working closely with the Community Foundations of Canada Leadership team, Board and foundations in Canada and abroad to help the philanthropic sector transform, innovate and meet the new challenges and opportunities of the 21st century.

Alex Kane is the owner of AK Arts Academy, a performing arts studio in London Ontario specializing in music, dance, theatre and film. Alexandra is the first Black female music director at the Grand Theatre. A founding member of Black London Network and lead activist for Black Lives Matter London, Alex is an advocate for racial equity and a community champion of local Black culture.

Carl Cadogan is the chair of the London Black History Coordination Committee. He is also the CEO of Reception House Waterloo Region, which welcomes and serves government-assisted refugees. Carl has held senior executive roles in the not-for-profit and government sectors. He has worked for organizations such as Commonwealth Association for Public Administration and Management (a 54-country member organization), Nokee Kwe, Polycultural Immigrant & Community Services and YMCA of Greater Toronto. Carl has also served on numerous boards, committees and task forces, including the Canadian Bankers Association, the Provincial Work Group on Gaming, Museum London and the United Ways of Greater Toronto and London. He was a founding Director of Eva's Place in Toronto and Pillar Nonprofit Network in London.

After 15 years working internationally in Consumer Marketing Research & Brand consultancy, Martin McIntosh returned 'home' to London, ON in 2012, where he grew up and completed his education at Western University (B.Sc Hons). Since his return, he has devoted a large share of his time and passion to the HIV/AIDS sector – working in support of those living with, affected by, and at risk for HIV/AIDS and Hep C. He works full time at the Regional HIV/AIDS Connection as Director of Education & Community Relations. He is lead facilitator for the Ontario AIDS Network's Positive Leadership Development Institute (PLDI) and co-chair for the Ontario HIV Treatment Network (OHTN) OCS governance committee.

Malvin Wright is a community development practitioner with over 20 years of experience leading global health and community development projects, programs and campaigns in over 4 countries globally, Nunavut and Ontario. He has led HIV/AIDS prevention education, Millennium Develop Goals (MDG), Micro-credit, Malnutrition and Public Health programs through an empowerment and community-led approach. He is passionate about finding creative solutions that are grounded in equity, justice and solidarity. Malvin sits on the Board of Directors of Pillar Nonprofit Network in London and is a founding member of the Black London Network. He participates and lends his experience to various community development and social justices projects and programs in London.

